ents of cotton since the commencement for resolts. During the first six months of the cotten year commencing September 1, 1870, the receipts are almost up to some 800 bales. Booides the advices were not of a cheering character, and prices the 17th of March, 1871, the receipts at all the ports amounted to 3,183,817 bales, against 2,301,872 bales for the corresponding period test year. This shows an excess of 849,945 bales in the receipts, and was mostly from exporters. The against constantly all a conton yield that at the commencement of the exton year. There is now very little doubt that the cutton crop of 1869 70 will amount to at least 4,200 000 bales. The crop of the pre-ceding year was 3,114,000, and was regarded the Stock, September 1, 1870...

hardly commands 15 cents per pound, and the planters can scarcely realize more than 11 or 12 cents per pound for their later. This is a reduction of 40 per cent, latur. This is a reduction of 40 per cent , or very marry one-half, as compared with last year. The planters are naturally dis-appointed. These who had drawn largely in satisfication of high prices for the staple, now find that their shipments will fall to cover their obligations. But the commission merchants in the exists are probably the heaviest are probably the heaviest at 12,000 bales. Imports, 800 bales. Now all testings are forced to economies. Now all parties are forced to economizs, and if the planters do not realize a loss, bey may be regarded as fortunate. On hie point, however, the indications are do. There is no reason to balley that the cast of production, including ginning and shipment, exceeded 11 cents per pound. But there is no margin for per pound. But there is no margin for profit, and there can hardly be any profit realized on the capital invested.

The trouble appears to be that the planters are obliged to sall their crops at greatly reduced rates, although they paid its old prices for labor and all the necessary of profession. This points to the earlies of production. This points to the
